

Reflection letters contain

Only a small amount of summarizing of the section you read

Personal connection and emotion

What do you notice about this reflection letter?

In the first nine pages of Uglies, Tally leaves Uglyville to go and spy on her friend, Peris, who was recently transformed into a pretty. The thought of a world divided into two places -- ugly and pretty reminded me of other utopian novels, like The Giver, where everything is seemingly perfect. Although making everyone pretty may seem perfect, I don't think it would be. How would people be unique?

Summary information is only 1 sentence

In the first nine pages of Uglies, Tally leaves Uglyville to go and spy on her friend, Peris, who was recently transformed into a pretty. The thought of a world divided into two places -- ugly and pretty reminded me of other utopian novels, like The Giver, where everything is seemingly perfect. Although making everyone pretty may seem perfect, I don't think it would be. How would people be unique?

In the first nine pages of Uglies, Tally leaves Uglyville to go and spy on her friend, Peris, who was recently transformed into a pretty.

One summary sentence

The thought of a world divided into two places -- ugly and pretty reminded me of other utopian novels, like The Giver, where everything is seemingly perfect. Although making everyone pretty may seem perfect, I don't think it would be. How would people be unique?

All the rest is personal connection and opinion.

It's only four sentences long.

1. In the first nine pages of Uglies, Tally leaves Uglyville to go and spy on her friend, Paris, who was recently transformed into a pretty.
2. The thought of a world divided into two places -- ugly and pretty reminded me of other utopian novels, like The Giver, where everything is seemingly perfect.
3. Although making everyone pretty may seem perfect, I don't think it would be.
4. How would people be unique?